Who are we?

Callie Rose is named after the great-grandmother of its proprietor, Alisa Orduna. We are a café of the minds where thoughts become words; words actions; and actions personal and community transformation.

We promote literacy and dialogue through the literary arts which includes fiction and nonfiction writing, screenwriting, poetry, films, textiles, visual arts, and performance.

Focused on storytelling, our mission is to ensure that positive self-esteem and wisdom is passed on to the next generation.

In addition, we hope to encourage our guests to find value in their creative talents so that as a community we become generators of knowledge in addition to consumers.

Callie Rose is a for-profit, social enterprise catering to the entire family from ages 3 to 100+. We survive on workshop fees, our Dialogue Series, special events, and donations by those able to pay a little more.

Writing Workshops

The greater Los Angeles community represents one of the largest producers of the creative economy nationwide. We are fortunate to access many writers and artists of various genres who are interested in giving their time to lead workshops. Topics range from poetry & prose to visual arts to marketing & publishing. Please check our monthly calendar for the latest listings.

Dialogue Series

We offer three dialogue series to bring folks together in discussion as a tool of community building and social action. These series include:

Literary Happy Hour Series

Guess Who's Coming to Dinner
